Objective:-

International conference on the topic “Drugs Youth and Stress- Protected by Legal Psychological and Sociological Approach” brings our attention to the strong link between stress and addiction. Everyone copes with stress in different ways, but some people may resort to using drugs or alcohol to manage their stress. Conversely, the impact of substance misuse on a person’s health, life, and relationships may cause excess stress. A survey in India had reported that two-fifths of addicts came in conflict with the law. Almost three-fourths of addicts were unable to work at their workplaces, and addicted students could not attend to their studies.

The NDPS Act, 1985 was formulated with a view to curb the illicit production, manufacturing, storage, supply and consumption of substances that are banned under the law. NDPS Act views drug offences very severely and penalties are stringent. The quantum of sentence and fine differs with offences and for various offences, the penalty depends on the quantity of drug involved.
